Case Report—A 60-year-old male patient with a 10-year history of rheumatoid arthritis (RA) presented with a 2-month history of progressive weakness and numbness in both lower extremities. The patient had no history of trauma, surgery, or other medical conditions. He was on chronic low-dose prednisone (5 mg daily) for his RA. Physical examination revealed mild muscle wasting and decreased reflexes in the lower extremities. Laboratory tests, including complete blood count, serum electrolytes, and renal function, were within normal limits. Magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) of the spine showed no significant abnormalities. Electromyography (EMG) and nerve conduction studies (NCS) showed a mixed pattern of axonal and demyelinating neuropathy, with prolonged distal latencies and reduced amplitudes in the lower extremities. The patient was treated with intravenous immunoglobulin (IVIg) 2 g/kg over 5 days, followed by a 6-month course of oral prednisone (10 mg daily). His symptoms improved significantly, and his reflexes returned to normal. The patient was then started on a low-dose chronic prednisone regimen (5 mg daily) to maintain remission. This case highlights the importance of considering autoimmune etiologies in the differential diagnosis of peripheral neuropathy, even in the presence of a long-standing autoimmune condition like RA.
